

WEEK 1 Y3

> C. L.

Beep, beep, beep! My alarm clocked. I yawned and tried to stop the beeping, but somehow, I knocked it of my bed table! "How did that happen?" I murmured when I picked it up. Suddenly, I realized that I was floating off the ground! I felt like I was stepping on a marshmallow! I zoomed to my mirror, dying to see what I looked like! I had a big velvet cape flowing out of my costume, and a uniform that said Veredia Fern! There was an abundance of rainbow glitter on it and a pair of emerald, green boots placed neatly on my feet. I was a kaleidoscope of colours! "Did I become a superhero?" I wonder what superpowers I had!

Maybe I was Queen of the Ocean! I could control all the sea creatures and the water. Or I could be a sun god! Wherever I go, the sun follows me! No, that couldn't be my power! I might be a Forest superhero instead! The animals and all the plants would have to do what I ordered them to!

Yes! That must be it! Maybe that's where I got my name: Veredia Fern... I was distracted from my daydream when I heard shouts of "HELP! HELP!" down the street. "Who could that be?" I thought.

I decided to peer out of the window. I saw a security guard chasing a robber from the bank! He was carrying a bag. What could be inside it? He also wore a black, rotting skeleton mask! He had a big, ferocious demon tattoo on his chest. I jumped out of the window, safely landing on a cloud. I could still see the robber from the sky! With all my energy, I zoomed towards the robber about to catch him! The robber saw me, and carefully dodged out of the way!

I leapt on another cloud and started flying towards him. However, he jumped to the sky and started floating towards the forest! I was bamboozled! He was a supervillain?! I followed him secretly, and he stopped on a crystal mountain.

He shouted the word, "Open Sesame" A purple portal appeared in front of him. He slipped in, and I managed to step in just in time before the portal closed. Still following the villain, he went inside a secret room. From his bag, he took a string of golden twine. I think he stole that from the bank! There was an unconscious girl lying on the table. The villain turned to her and wrapped the golden twine around her.

There was a flash of light, and the girl turned into a dove! The villain must have stolen the girl's soul and turned it into a dove! I couldn't believe what I was seeing! There were five cages of doves hanging on the ceiling. He trapped the dove into a cage and locked it. I had to stop him from stealing people's souls. I shouted. "Stop!" He turned around and he looked shocked! "How did you get in here?!" He snarled, his bloodshot red eyes cut into mine, and I felt like he was about to burn a hole in my forehead.

I was scared, but I wasn't going to show it. "What are you doing?" I shouted back, ignoring him. He glared at me and didn't say anything. Suddenly, a demon burst out of his chest! At first, he tried to shoot a lightning bolt at my head, but I ducked. It hit one of the cages instead! It burnt and opened. The dove was free!

The man suddenly looked a bit older. I called all the animals, and plants from the forest, and they started creeping towards him. The plant wrapped itself around him, so he could not escape.

I told the birds to bite open all the cages of doves, so that they would all be set free. Now the villain looked 100 years old! He must have been using all the souls of those kids to make him young again!

I looked over to where the lightning bolt had struck. I quickly grabbed it and threw it at the man's head! Now he was nothing but a pile of burnt ashes. I kept the lightning bolt. It could be useful in the future.

This day has turned out to be wonderful! I defeated a supervillain and his demon with the help of my forest friends! It was epic! I looked out of the window. I saw the doves all perched up on a tree singing pulchritudinous melodies that filled my ear with mysterious enhances. I felt so melancholic for them. Though they were once human, they would always stay as birds. I would keep searching for my potential superpower to save them.

The eau de nil trees swished as the zephyr pasted like a prancing deer as my alabaster alarm clock rang and woke me up. I ran downstairs as my mum opened her mouth to speak but I beat her to it.

"I'm going to brush my teeth, mum!" I said.

My mum smiled at me like she just got a new milestone bracelet. My sister, Abigail slowly walked downstairs as she rubbed her eyes.

"Sweetheart, you all right?" my mum asked her, flipping pancakes around.

"No, I'm sick," Abigail said. "I won't be able to do work now,"

"Mum, she is lying!" I said.

My mum looked at my sister suspiciously as she blinked her eyes innocently. My mum then looked at me as I nodded, answering her question, "are you sure?"

"Abigail, are you lying?" my mum said in a stern voice.

My sister's cheeks flushed red like a tomato and nodded. My mum gave me a thumbs up. I smiled as I climbed onto my breakfast chair as my mum told Abigail not to lie. I couldn't understand what got into me. Why did I suddenly know everything? How did I know that Abigail was lying? Then I knew my answer to both questions. I had..... Telepathy!

I told my mum and she smiled at me brightly as my sister eavesdropped our conversation and avoided me. I gobbled down my scrumptious breakfast which was scrambled eggs, boiled sausages, cucumbers and pancakes which had a rich and lovely smell.

"Mum, can I go to the park and tell my friends about my telepathy?" I asked sweetly.

"No, Amethyst," my mum said sarcastically.

"Mum, you're lying," I said, looking at her with big eyes.

"Fine," my mum whispered.

I ran outside full of jollity and mirth as the flowers shined in the sun, their colours periwinkle and yellow showing brightly. I ran to the local park, its equipment was burning hot as the sun's rays shone on it and little people about the same age as me had smiles on their faces as they played like two little bunnies hopping around in a meadow. I saw my friend, Opal waving at me while sliding down the slide. She ran to me, crazily.

" Amethyst! Guess what?! A girl came up to me and said-"

"-she wanted to be your friend, I know Opal," I said as Opal looked at me very carefully.

"How did you know?" Opal asked, her eyes wide open.

I smirked at her and told her every single detail about what happened this morning.

"You have telepathy?!" Opal asked, her eyes full of wonder.

I nodded, happily as the sky became darker, its light blue had turned into an ultramarine blue with some twinkling stars. I went home and saw my sister peeping from her window, glaring at me because I got telepathy. I had an amazing time. It was like telepathy was my best friend and it was with me for a whole day. Telepathy is extraordinary!
